edge of the Art of the Renaissance and later periods are to be seen in the important collection I now offer for the public competition of the people of "The beauty, subtlety and charm of old Italian Furniture have taken a firm hold on the affections of the people of this country, and I accord-in bringing together the most interesting pieces it was possible for me to "Nor did I confine myself to any epoch or period. It was my aim to make a compelling showing of the unrivaled skill and ability of Italian furniture-makers of many generations of the fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and I have, therefore, included many fascinating examples of later schools, such as that of Venice in the eighteenth century.

ingly felt that I was acting wisely in sparing neither time, energy nor money

"Italian Renaissance Textiles and Embroideries have always been highly regarded, and of this regard their wide dispersal throughout the world has been an obvious consequence. It therefore gives me peculiar pleasure to have brought here a number of early velvets, damasks and embroideries such as, I confidently believe, have never been seen in this country. "The Pictures and Sculpture, the Tapestries and Asia Minor Rugs, the Carvings and Metaiwork, as well as the minor articles, have all been selected with a feeling for associative value as well as inherent beauty, and so should convey a very urgent appeal to the students of human nature as well as to those who are chiefly influenced by artistic worthiness." PROFESSOR ELIA VOLPI.
